The Faculty of Arts and Humanities is well known nationally and internationally. It offers high quality education at undergraduate and postgraduate levels in a variety of fields, and has a substantial research profile. Graduates are equipped with the skills of critical thinking, effective communication, and social responsiveness, and they have the ability to interact well in contexts of social diversity.

Our graduates have successful careers in the fields of media, journalism, education, marketing, public relations, publishing, editing, advertising, development work, information technology, library and archival work, translation, religious ministry, writing and consultancy.

The first year of undergraduate study for an Arts and Humanities degree offers a broad grounding in at least four subjects, improving students' general knowledge and developing important thinking, communication, study and information technology skills. In the second and third year of the BA and BTh there is greater focus on the specific subjects which make up the majors of the degrees. The BBibI is a four-year programme, incorporating large parts of the BA curriculum. The courses of study in all subjects offer training which is of international standard, but which remains engaged with the specifics of our society. The combination of broad critical skills and knowledge with particular subject training is in high demand within the job market. Our undergraduate degrees also offer an excellent foundation for further study.

After the Bachelor's degree, Arts offers an exciting range of postgraduate options at Honours, Master's and Doctoral levels. The Faculty is one of the leading producers of research at UWC; is home to many internationally recognised researchers and has partnerships with universities and institutions elsewhere in Africa and further afield.
